"The committee is unwilling to recommend an appropriation for financing further participation by the United States at this time," the House Appropriations Committee report said. "Conceivably by V-E day, there may be need for an independent agency to join again in such an investigation (of war crimes)."

"That is damned nonsense, too," Mr. Fell asserted. "We made that mistake after the last war. The result was that nothing was done. And nothing will be done this time unless courts and procedure for dealing with war criminals are formulated now."

Mr. Fell said he thought it was unusual that the State Department waited until now, nearly two

First Red In Berlin To Get Prize From Lubliner In N.Y.

The rapid advance of the Russian armies has given David Kay no end of joy. Mr. Kay, a native of Lublin, Poland and a businessman with offices at 450 Seventh Avenue, New York, offered $1,000 to the first Russian soldier or unit to enter Berlin.

His offer was contained in a letter to the Russian General General's office in New York, and a spokesman of the General's office said that the offer would be "accepted as a token of appreciation."

Mr. Kay ... [illegible] ... and with the ... and cooperate with him." The letter went on to mention the first offer of $1,000 to start the fund for the rebuilding of Stalingrad, "that

SAYS JEWS IN POLAND NUMBER 30,000

Zygmunt Modzielewski, Lublin's Ambassador to the Soviet Union said some Jews survived in Poland after years of persecution. The envoy placed the number of Jews in Lodz at 5,000.

He estimated that about 30,000 Jews remained alive on liberated Polish soil, in contrast with a pre-war total of more than 3,000,000. He said that in Czestochowa's ghetto about 5,000 Jews had survived by working in German war plants.

Strange Story Of Refugee Couple Told In Court

Supreme Court Justice Ferdinand Pecora, of New York, approved a settlement after a week and a half of trial of the suit brought by Richard Arama, architect engineer and for years a real estate operator in Berlin, against his wife Alice F. Arama, for conversion of his life savings entrusted to her for maintenance and support of her and their two children.

Arama, a citizen of the Free City of Danzig and holder of engineering degrees in Danzig and Berlin, became a real estate operator in Berlin in 1927 and leased some of his property to the German Navy. Long before the German Government issued the decree in 1931 forbidding the transfer of property out of that country and requiring foreigners to register their property, he had been sending funds to Switzerland.

In 1934 he sent his wife and their children, Ann, 15 and Frank 9, to Prague. In 1936 he was arrested by the Gestapo, searched and released. For a year he risked his life trying to salvage his fortune for his wife and family.

The method employed by Arama was explained by his attorney, Louis Richman, of 225 Broadway, from testimony at the trial. Arama, he said, would make a telephone call to his wife in Prague, telling her that he was going on a business trip to Dresden.

While aboard the train he would put his German money into a pitcher of water in the washroom. Mrs. Arama would get aboard the train at Aussig, ride a short distance, fish the money out of its hiding place and ... [illegible] ... the money ... and have it changed into kroners.

In 1937 Arama was arrested and held for a year before being brought to trial. He was convicted later and sentenced to four years in Moabit, a jail in the suburbs of Berlin where he witnessed tortures and killings almost daily. While he was in prison his wife reached Zurich with the children.

She later got to Spain and was in Paris two days before the Germans marched in. She then got to

Book Shows Nazi Treatment Of Jewish Children

A "Black Book of the Children", an expose of Nazi torture and mistreatment of Jewish children, has been compiled from thousands of case histories of young refugees in Palestine and soon will be issued by U.S. Hadassah, it was announced at the mid-winter conference of the group's national board at the Park Central Hotel, in New York.

The pace at which these children are entering Palestine from Europe has doubled in the last two months, it was said. A total of 822 boys and girls from Transnistria section of Rumania, Hungary, Yugoslavia, and Bulgaria were taken to Palestine between Nov. 1 and Jan. 9 under the auspices of the Youth Aliyah movement, of which Hadassah is the official American agency. Ranging in age from seven to 17 years, most of the children have seen their parents taken away to slave labor, it was said. Eighty-five per cent are orphans.

Mrs. Alexander M. Dushkin, vocational education chairman, and Mrs. Harry P. Fierst, child welfare chairman, reported on a plan to provide safeguards for the present younger generation in Palestine to prevent a breakdown in standards of health and hygiene. Hadassah supports fifty infant welfare stations in Palestine, feeds 30,000 boys and girls through its school-lunch project and supervises the health of 60,000 grammar school children, they said.

The conference ended with delivery of a citation by the Treasury Department to Mrs. Nathan D. Perlman, American officers chairman of Hadassah, for her success in a campaign to raise $18,000,000 in the Sixth War Loan Drive.

Gift To Yale Provides Jewish Research

A five-year project of research in Hebrew and Jewish literature will be started at Yale University through a financial gift by Louis M. Rabinowitz, of New York, Dr. Charles Seymour announced today. The plan, to be known as the Judaica Research at Yale University on the Rabinowitz Foundation, will delve into the legacy of Judaism.

Only preliminary portions of the program have been adopted in detail. It provides for a series of outstanding works of Jewish literature, both ancient and medieval, to be translated from their Hebraic, Aramaic, or Arabic originals and eventually polished. Works not previously translated will be chosen.

The plan is to be administered by a group of Yale faculty members representing the Semitic-Judaica fields of oriental studies. Appointed by Dr. Seymour, the administrative committee will be under the sponsorship of the dean of the Graduate School, Provost Edgar S. Furniss, and consists of Professor Julian J. Obermann, chairman; acting librarian, James T. Babb, and Professors Millar Burrows, Erwin R. Goodenough and Carl H. Kraeling.

Immediate supervision of editing and publication has been entrusted to a board of editors consisting of Professor Louis Ginzberg, of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America; Professor Harry A. Wolfson, of Harvard; and Professor Obermann.

In April, 1944, Mr. Rabinowitz presented the Hebrew Arab collection of literature and art to Yale. It was a collection of ancient and

ALBANY SCHOOLS TO HAVE CHRISTMAS-CHANUKAH PROGRAM THIS YEAR

Joint Easter-Passover and Christmas-Chanukah programs will be held in most of Albany's public schools hereafter as a result of a unique project initiated by Rabbi Solomon J. Mesmore, counselor of the Bnai Brith Hillel Counselorship at the New York State Teacher's College.

As at most institutions, a Christmas program has been traditional at State Teacher's College but this year Rabbi Mesmore persuaded the college authorities to convert the Christmas program into a Christmas toy shop and candlelight service, with a good part of the program devoted to a portrayal of the Chanukah Candlelight scene and narrative. A Hillel girl acted as cantor for the benedictions and the narrative sketch featured the college chorus singing Maoz Tzur.

Shortly after the Christmas-Chanukah program, Rabbi Mesmore was called by the principals of two elementary schools and one high school, inquiring why he had not planned to let them in on the idea as well. The result is that henceforth the schools will organize joint Easter-Passover and Christmas-Chanukah programs, the Jewish portions of which Rabbi Mesmore is preparing.

J.D.C. Repays $6,000,000 Lent By Frenchmen For Support And Hiding Of Jews

The American Joint Distribution Committee is now paying back almost $6,000,000 lent by Frenchmen for the support and hiding of Jews during the German occupation. Arthur Greenleigh, Paris director of the committee, said that the committee was also organizing the rehabilitation of the 170,000 of France's pre-armistice 350,000 Jews who survived the German scourge.

Since money could not be sent from the United States to occupied France, Jewish organizations dependent on the committee were allowed to borrow in its name. Some Frenchmen were so eager to find a safe place for their money that they asked no interest or even offered a premium to have the Jews take it.

There is scarcely a Jew alive in France today who has not at some time benefited from these borrowed funds, averaging $150,000 a month during the past two years. More than eight thousand children were farmed out to Christian foster-homes. Many more families mixed Jewish children with their own to hide them from the German authorities and received about $20 a month for their support. The Germans at first offered $100 for every Jew turned in but later reduced the price to $50.

About 25,000 of the Jews who have come home to Paris since the liberation have found that their furniture was shipped to Germany and their premises have been occupied. Very few have been able to reoccupy them—even though they are entitled to do so by law—because many of the occupants are refugees, families of war prisoners or members of similar categories enjoying special protection.

Before the war, 200,000 Jews lived in Paris. Today there are only 80,000, half of whom have recently returned. The Joint Distribution Committee is supporting three homes for several hundred of the neediest and is feeding almost 4,000 at canteens daily.

For others it has set up an employment service or is helping them to buy tools or to set up in business again. Several thousand who were in concentration camps are recovering in convalescent camps in southern France.

After having cross-checked the information of about a half-dozen French-Jewish organizations, Mr. Greenleigh estimated that 10,000 Jews had been shot or had died in concentration camps in France during the occupation. One hundred and twenty-seven thousand were deported and most of these, it is feared, died in Polish extermination camps and elsewhere. Two-thirds of those deported were refugees from Germany before the war or came from Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg after their occupation.

While some went into hiding, about 80,000 other Jews escaped the Germans by emigrating from France, legally and illegally, to [illegible] ... Spain, Portugal and ... [illegible] ... Switzerland, ... [illegible] ... countries of ... [illegible]

SCOFFS AT IDEA ANTI-SEMITISM IS INCURABLE

One hundred leaders of progressive thought in America, propagtly organized and backed by clergymen and grass, could act as an antidote against "the poisonous hatred that causes anti-Semitism and anti-Judaism" and could render a lasting service to the country and to humanity, the Rev. Dr. John Walter Houck, pastor of the Pilgrim Church of New York, 179th Street and Grand Concourse, the Bronx, declared.

"When I am told that subversive ideas have their roots so deeply buried in the subconscious mind that truth and reason cannot reach the source, I know I am being misinformed," he said. "Anti-Semitism is not incurable.

"Subversive teaching injures not only the victim but also those who are possessed by the disease. Hatred is a sign of what we call a diseased mind. We can and must work together to cure every trace of un-Americanism."

Palestine Problem Is At Impasse As Only 10,000 Permits Remain

By Anne O'Hare McCormick, In The New York Times

The setback on the western front also sets back the clock for those in this part of the world who have adjusted their minds and movements — their urgent "appointments with destiny" — to post-war time. The fighting has passed very far from here and the tendency is to consider the military phase of the struggle all but over and concentrate exclusively on the political settlements to follow — and, of course, on settlements affecting the fate of Palestine. Complete absorption in local problems is jarred a little by the sobering warning from France that the war is not yet won.

This fresh reminder that Palestine's future, which Zionists are the first to insist is a world interest, depends on military victory of the Allied powers, helps put it in its true perspective.

The first impression of the observer coming to the Holy Land, a new backwater of war, from the live battle zone in that every idea, every argument, every claim is a precise repetition in larger type of assertions and negations made in the same place, often by the same spokesmen, six years ago.

This impression is heightened by the unchanged setting of the drama whereof the stage itself — this place where the Messiah came or is always coming — is an integral part of the play. Not a bomb has fallen on Palestine. All is as it was —the old city of Jerusalem sitting within its haunted walls as aloof from the ivory-colored modern town pushing up the surrounding hills as if it were miles as well as centuries away.

But though things look the same on the surface, and the line of argument sounds the same, one soon discovers that the emphasis on all sides has shifted. Elements of the problems are unchanged, but the context, the terms of reference, the conditions wherein it has to be solved are different.

This isn't to say there are any signs of compromise between the Zionist demand for unrestricted immigration and a Jewish national state and the Arab insistence on stoppage of immigration to keep the Jews a permanent minority in an Arab independent state. The absence of the slightest attempt on the part of Zionist leaders on one hand or Arab leaders on the other to reach an agreement with one another on any point is the most remarkable feature of the impasse.

The only proposal of this nature from the Zionists is that of Dr. Judah Magnes, president of the Hebrew University of the Binational State, on the basis of parity between Jews and Arabs. From the Arab side no constructive suggestion of any kind is heard.

One change on the Zionist side is a disposition to relax pressure for immediate decisions. This is by no means general, but Dr. Chaim Weizmann's advocacy of a transitional period before achievement of a Jewish state has made considerable headway. Both the President of the United States Zionist and the counsel of President Roosevelt are responsible for the defeat by the American Zionist organization of Rabbi Silver's policy of forcing the pace. David Ben-Gurion and other officials of the Jewish Agency take the view that the President's advice should be heeded. Dr. Magnes also pleads for time, not on the same grounds of political expediency, but because he thinks delay in taking an irrevocable step offers the last chance for that understanding with the Arabs whereon all his hopes of peace are fixed.

It is difficult to exaggerate American influence in the development of this situation, now nearing the explosive point where a fresh decision, temporary or final, must be made on the key question of immigration. Only about 10,000 entry permits remain to be given out under the terms of the White Paper at a moment when dispossessed survivors of Nazi terror, gathered in liberated countries in unspeakable misery, clamor for asylum. There are 45,000 in Bulgaria alone.

Planks in two party platforms in the United States have stiffened the Zionists in their maximum demands and their refusal to compromise either with British or Arabs. At the same time, these declarations of policy have changed the Arabs' attitude toward America to one of resentment and vague distrust.

Another change is in the Zionist attitude toward Great Britain. The homeland idea was always based on British support and protection but now the extremist Jewish nationalist starts with the premise that Britain too will remain in Palestine not as a mandatory power but with bases, controls and such force as she needs to guard strategic routes to empire.

This concept of Britain's role as protector of Palestine was tacitly accepted, even during outbreaks of Arab violence followed by issuance of a White Paper when Jewish feeling ran high against Britain, but today it is publicly expressed. More than that, there is growing preference for British trusteeship as against international trusteeship.

The war has greatly increased the prestige of the British among the Arabs also. Britain's stock in the Arab world is higher than it has been for a decade. But Arab nationalism is stronger too.

This union of disparate Arab peoples will take a long time to form and will not be tight or cohesive if established, but those who know the Arabs say the movement represents a real upsurge of nationalism and a political trend that cannot be disregarded. Like the Zionist acknowledgment of dependence on Britain, the Arabian move toward unity expresses the realization that small units are lost in a world ruled by great powers.

Palestinian Jewish troops stationed in Rome were permitted to make use of the Vatican Hebrew printing press to print Hebrew text-books intended for refugees.

The Bulgarian Fatherland Front has decided to admit the Zionist groups, the first to be the Hashalutz and Poale Zion, labor party.

STRANGE STORY

London and arrived in the U. S. with the family in August, 1939. Arama told the court that when he arrived in the U. S. from Cuba in Nov. 2, 1941, penniless, he pleaded with his wife for money and finally brought the suit against her.

Arama according to his attorney sought a judgment for $49,000. His wife made counter claims and the suit was settled when he agreed to accept $13,000 and his wife withdrew her claims. Justice Pecora tried to effect a reconciliation between the couple but was not successful.

DIGGING RESUMED

eral Federation of Jewish labor together with a committee of the Jewish villages of the Jordan Valley area and as having assistance from the Jewish National Fund.

Simultaneously surveys have begun in preparation for the establishment of an agricultural school on an adjacent site for the Jewish rural settlements in that zone.

Beth Yerash, whose ruins explain the Arabic name "Khirbet," covers fifty acres and had a large Jewish community, especially in the third century before Christ. In ancient times it served as an important entrepot for trade between Egypt and Mesopotamia, but was later abandoned and resettled in the second temple period, when it had the Greek name of Cilletoris. The name Beth Yerash is mentioned several times in Talmudic literature and there are accounts extant of its life during the period of Roman occupation of Galilee.

It is anticipated that the new digging, which is conducted by Dr. Benjamin Maisler and Dr. Moshe Stekelis of the Hebrew University's Department of Jewish Archaeology, will shed revealing light upon an outstanding period of Israel's history when the Jews were expelled from Jerusalem after its destruction by Titus.

WANTS TO AVENGE

months after the House action, t raises the question in public. There is no record of a State Department protest on the House action.

Acting Secretary of State Joseph C. Grew, in announcing that Mr. Pell would not go back to London, said that Lieutenant Colonel [illegible] was leaving [illegible] ...explained that he, as on the War Department pay roll.

Mr. Pell said he was further confused by this action because he had the greatest admiration of Colonel Hodgson.

"I think Hodgson would support the same policies that I have," he said. "He has been a tower of strength in supporting the things we have sought on the commission. He was not directly involved in the Jewish question, however, having come to London only in the middle of last year."

Mr. Pell, who was appointed American member of the United Nations War Crimes Commission in June, 1943, served as American Minister of Portugal from 1937 to 1941, and subsequently as Minister to Hungary until that Axis satellite broke relations with the United States.

He served in the House of Representatives from 1919 to 1921 from the 17th New York District, and was chairman of the Democratic State Committee from 1921 to 1926 and vice-chairman of the Democratic National Campaign Committee in 1926. He was born in New York Feb. 18, 1884; attended Pomfret School and was graduated from Harvard in 1906, a year after President Roosevelt. He also attended Columbia University and New York Law School.

Although a Democrat, during recent years, he repeatedly urged the Republican party to rid itself of isolationist leaders, particularly former Representative Hamilton Fish. On a number of occasions he publicly warned that Germany was planning for a third world war, and in an article published Dec. 19, 1943, in "This Week," Sunday magazine section of The New York Herald Tribune, he wrote: "We must now make it clear to every German that war is the most unprofitable enterprise in the world.

"I am thinking of our unborn children, and I'll see myself damned, in the most literal and theological sense of the word, before I will leave a stone unturned that might save them from a third world war."

Justice To The Negro, Fellowship Among All

Soon we shall observe Abraham Lincoln's 136th birthday. This great American is best known to all mankind as "The Emancipator", the heroic figure who dared all and sacrificed all that the Negro might be set free. Hence, in observance of Lincoln's natal day which occurs on Monday, February 12, we publish the message on Race Relations issued by the Commission on Justice and Peace of our Central Conference of American Rabbis:

"But thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself: I am the Lord"—Lev. 19:18.

"Our war effort, which has channeled most of our national resources into a single drive for victory, has also highlighted the moral objectives for which we strive. One of these is the achievement of fellowship among all the sons of men, whatever their ancestry or race. Prejudices based on differences in color are relics of a primitive age which neither the findings of modern science nor the teachings of high religion can justify.

"We of the Household of Israel express our sense of brotherhood with the colored races. We pledge them our support in the struggle for the equality which is their right in all spheres of human endeavor. In seeking justice they are claiming their birthright, which is upheld by the equality of all men before God and in the principles of the Declaration of Independence and of the Constitution of the United States.

"We rejoice in the recent progress made in minimizing discrimination and segregation which have dishonored our democratic society. We welcome the gains of the Fair Employment Practices Committee in opening the doors of industrial establishments and trade unions to those who were previously shut out by racial and religious intolerance. When that body is established, as we hope, on a permanent basis with adequate appropriations, it will be all the more effective. We urge that [illegible] should be set up by law in all the states [illegible] which might otherwise be [illegible] in public employment and damage.

"No racial group in our country has manifested more heroism on the field of battle than our soldiers of Japanese ancestry who have won glory in the Italian campaign. It is heartening to learn that an act of belated justice is permitting loyal Japanese-Americans to return to their home communities on the Pacific Coast.

"Despite all the encouraging episodes in the war against prejudice we are sufficiently realistic to appreciate the great labor before us, if we are to triumph over the tradition of hate, which sanctions Jim Crow laws with their accompaniment of bad housing, sub-standard wages, and inadequate educational facilities. These survivals of slavery must be abolished.

"We are gratified to note that religious groups are setting examples in racial justice. The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America elected a Negro as its vice-president and St. Louis University opened its doors to Negro students. May we all prove our consecration to the will of God by seeking to rid men of the spiritual disease of race prejudice. May men of good will, of whatever denomination, hasten the day when all men—black, brown, yellow, and white may recognize that they are brethren, children of our father in heaven."

protests the study of the then little-known subject of parent education.

With Mrs. Gans as leader the group, which had been on the point of disbanding, enlarged its activities, under the title of the Federation for Child Study, and, later, assumed its present corporate name. It is generally recognized as the pioneer American organization in the field of parent education and now has affiliated groups throughout the country.

In 1917 Mrs. Gans organized the Play Schools Committee of the Child Study Association, which later became the Independent Play Schools Association. As head of the latter group she traveled in the U. S. and abroad and delivered many lectures on the study of parents' relation to their children. She resigned as president in 1938 but retained an active interest in the organization until her death.

She was married to Louis Sternberger, from whom she was divorced in 1906 and then she was married to Howard S. Gans, a former Assistant District Attorney of New York County, who became counsel for District Attorney William Trenery Jerome.

Surviving besides her husband and daughter are a son Robert S. Gans of Birmingham, Mich.; a sister, Mrs. Leopold S. Rosbe, and a brother, Fred M. Stein, both of New York.

FIRST RED

it may be the start of a special fund, perhaps a memorial fund in grateful memory to the valiant and successful stand of the Soviet forces in that city." Then followed Mr. Kay's reference to the second offer of $1,000:

"The second check is a prize for the first Russian soldier to enter Berlin. Should it prove impossible to determine who that individual is, then I should like the money to be divided equally among the men comprising the first Russian unit to enter the German capital."

A citizen of the U.S. since early manhood, Mr. Kay, 44 years old said that he and several brothers as well as his parents left Lublin when he was a youngster, settling on the lower east side, where he attended public school. "But I still retain many fond memories of my early life there," he continued, "and once the new Polish Government has been settled to the satisfaction of the Allies I will do what little I can to help finance the rehabilitation of Lublin."

Soon after the Allied invasion of France, Mr. Kay offered a $1,000 War Bond to the first American soldier to reach Paris. Since the liberation of Paris, he explained, the authorities have not been able to determine the rightful recipient.

He said that as a youth he developed a fondness for photography, which earned him a job in Hollywood, where he worked for several years as a camera man for the silent screen, before returning to New York to launch a successful business career.

every friday

"Sometimes when people overheard me,
I will them without wonder
That for what it cost me to be free,
I might have had an easier."

Poor old Every Friday has been pushed around scandalously of late to make room for pictures and other material pertaining to the recent sixth full session of the Canadian Jewish Congress in Toronto, leaving Rabbi Stern to hold down the fort of deep thinking on the larger issues. However, that's what you get for not being important, and the altitude of this column struck a new high in being low at the Congress sessions where, as an unofficial, detached observer for the Canadian Jewish Review, it was easily the most inconsequential part of the convention, an indefatigable, if undistinguished, listener of next to superhuman endurance. As a result of this thorough work-out in the world of affairs where items foregather every three years, Every Friday came away punch-drunk with knowledge, agenda, rumor, and learning enough to last until the next such event beckons to a halcyon period which can only be described as living the life of Riley.

Under the leadership of Samuel Bronfman, of Montreal, during the past six years, the general tone of Congress conclaves has improved, and the organization gives the impression of being firmly and permanently rooted.

Its visiting speakers were good rather than showy and there were fewer than usual of the winged words that hypnotize and the golden voices that prophesy. Professor Selig Brodetsky, the mathematician, president of the Board of Deputies of British Jews; and S. Sydney Silverman, M.P., of London, England, should have been retained here indefinitely to teach Canadian Jewish professional speakers how to talk with an economy of words in perfect logic, forcefulness, and clarity which needed no platform heroics for adornment and which made their speeches of exceptional quality.

They are both little men, walking brains, as it were. They are physically not so imposing as Dr. Nahum Goldmann, of the World Jewish Congress, who is a master orator, but they prove that they don't need to be. And neither one would have done what Goldmann did when he walked into the convention hall and took his seat at the head table while Dr. Brodetsky was speaking from there.

The delegates, abandoning Brodetsky for the while, gave their hero a welcoming burst of applause which was uncalled for in the circumstances. Goldmann could say that it was not his fault, but he is an old hand with crowds and must have known what would happen as a discourtesy to Brodetsky. He should have stayed out of the hall until the end of the speech.

[illegible] stayed out of the hall [illegible] the end of the speech, [illegible] at least a few people to wipe off the [illegible] and dark mutterings about less glamour and better manners.

Baruch Zukerman, Labor Zionist leader, of the World Jewish Congress, spoke in Yiddish. He is loved and respected, and no doubt with reason. But his delivery, in a sustained shout which gets hoarser with the passage of the minutes while he sweats and appears to suffer distress, is so outmoded today that it must be for people who always used to like that kind of a show and still get homesick for it.

As for the Joint Distribution Committee speaker, Moses A. Leavitt, this column does not doubt that he has all the wonderful attributes that superior people have, but his colorlessness was a strong incentive to a game of tiddle-de-winks which never should have come to mind when J. D. C. business was at hand. Boredom is not an inevitable concomitant of simple good taste and high class tailoring.

Coleman, H. M., general secretary of the Congress, made a good speech about the need of far-flung communities for contacts with Jewish life, and some planned education; short and good, or good and short, it was all right. The delegates seemed to know that they were lucky to have Saul Hayes, of Montreal, as national executive director. Bland, efficient (and is it too much to say handsome?) he gave a concise summary of the Congress convention which came from a confident speaker and a man who could represent the Congress anywhere in the world with credit to himself and the community back home.

The boyish young Rabbi A. Penso, head of the Bnai Brith Lodge Hillel Foundation at the University of Manitoba, and a teacher there, gave a brisk and engaging talk which was a gem of its kind, urging delegates not to let their leaders shove aside the question of an adequate Jewish education which would bring color and drama to the subject. What he said was not new but it was the real goods, honest and heart-felt and full of plain common horse sense, the rarest thing in the world to come from the mouth of a speaker. He has the authentic human touch, the precious and delicate gift for reaching the hearts of people, if this column is any judge.

The most notable session chairman of the Congress convention was Edward E. Gelber, of Toronto, who has the presence, the voice, the tact, and the judgment it takes to be effective. This column was also very admiring of the deft way Rabbi Stern held the unflagging interest of his hearers.

It was not, however, admiring of the times when some Jews wanted to shout down others without a hearing. With the world the way it is and Jews always sticking up for the rights of minorities when they are the minority they mean, it hardly behooves them to turn into caustic assholes and popcorchikes on the convention floor even for enlivening effect.

To give the customers a really better deal there ought to be less obvious costs and enough committees to take in more of the men who are bigger frogs in the little puddles they come from than they are when they get to a convention session. After all, gentlemen, without them there could be no head tables because there would be no spectators and there would be no respectful attention because there would be no earnest listeners. This column is for the type which explained eagerly to the writer that he was the first Jew in such-and-such a town. He looked very docile but he probably didn't feel that way.

The banquet was better than usual because Sol. Kaufman, of Toronto, saw to it, and this false prophet was forced to revise the gloomy prediction that it would be fish. There was chicken, too, as a choice. One kosher baby was worried about it not until he had eaten it, showing eminent wisdom in his mother. In case it still bothers him, he has the endorsement this so-called moulder of public opinion that he can eat it. And if it wasn't kosher, the Rabbinical Council will be only glad to excommunicate the guilty people, and fast.

Many delegates had gone, but the Review was still there when J. B. Salsberg, M.P.P., of Toronto, spoke from the platform, very well and forthrightly, symbolizing the emergence of his group into the councils of the Canadian Jewish Congress. This column does not know from convention literature, but, to call them, but, from the look on the faces of the Labor-Progressives they seemed to be Labor-Progressives. Is that right? Anyway this column knows nothing from the inside about [illegible] rumors of wars. All it knows is that peace, it's wonderful.

Just one more observation: There was a great [illegible] this writer would not have missed for anything. It was a ceremony when Major A. H. Principal, in Canadian army [illegible] form, presided, and a few veterans of this war and the [illegible] marched in with flags. In that moment you could have [illegible] your hand on the anguished heart of the Jews everywhere. As auxiliary people, they grieved for their dead in this [illegible] for the sons who would not be coming back. Men and [illegible] across the big hall stood in an agony of grief, silent in [illegible] for the dead, but weeping openly over young spirits cut [illegible] in the time of its fruition. You would have cried, too, if [illegible] had been there.
